traditional monster imagery in manga anime and japanese cinema builds on the earlier volume anime and its roots in early japanese monster art that aimed to position contemporary japanese animation within a wider art historical context by tracing the development of monster representations in edo and meiji period art works and post war visual media while the previous volume concentrated on modern media representations this work focuses on how western art historical concepts and methodology might be adapted when considering non western works introducing traditional monster art in more detail while also maintaining its links to post war animation sequential art and japanese cinema the book aims at a general readership interested in japanese art and media as well as graduate students who might be searching for a research model within the fields of animation studies media studies or visual communication design during the nineteenth century willington mill near wallsend gained an infamous reputation for being haunted bizarre noises apparitions and poltergeist activity dogged the premises and were experienced by dozens of credible witnesses the case attracted the interest of the country's leading psychical researchers of the time but the mystery was never solved until now using a wide variety of contemporary sources along with cutting edge investigative techniques michael j hallowell and darren w ritson have pieced together the true story of willington mill as well as detailing the fascinating phenomena that occurred in the building the haunting of willington mill is at last able to offer an explanation for one of england's most enigmatic and puzzling hauntings japanese anime plays a major role in modern popular visual culture and aesthetics yet this is the first study which sets out to put today's anime in historical context by tracking the visual links between edo and meiji period painters and the post war period animation and manga series gegegeno kitaro by mizuki shigeru through an investigation of the very popular gegegeno kitaro series broadcast from the 1960s to the present time the author is able to pinpoint the visual roots of the animation characters in the context of yōkai folklore and edo and meiji period monster painting traditions through analysing the changing images related to the representation of monsters in the series the book documents the changes in the perception of monsters over the last half century while at the same time reflecting on the importance of mizuki's work in keeping japan's visual traditions alive and educating new audiences about folklore by recasting yōkai imagery in modern day settings in an innovative way in addition by analysing and comparing character set costume and mask design plot and storyline of yōkai themed films the book is also the first study to shed light on the roles the representations of yōkai have been assigned in post war japanese cinema this book will be of particular interest to those studying japanese visual media including manga and animation as well as students and academics in the fields of japanese studies animation studies art history and graphic design this project pursues a genealogical study of the concept of charisma in its weberian form it addresses the question of what conceptual routes led from ancient greek and christian understandings of charis grace and charisma gift of grace to max weber's sociological treatment of charisma on what path and with what turns of thought could the distance between them be traversed this study answers that question primarily through attention to how deeply weber's treatment of the theme is embedded in german literary and philosophical engagements with grace in the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries the perspectives afforded by this project shed new light both on weberian charisma and on weber's literary and philosophical precursors and allow us to reflect in new ways on what charisma can and should mean for us today
